

Atlanta Braves Release Six Renderings of New Ballpark and Mixed Use Development

The Atlanta Braves have released six conceptual renderings for a first peek at the new ballpark and mixed-use development design.

“This is a very early look at how our vision is shaping up and, even though we are still months away from final plans and drawings, we are very pleased with the progress,” said John Schuerholz, president of the Atlanta Braves. “The renderings represent the sense of place we intend to create 365 days a year in addition to a world-class ballpark.”

Shopping, dining, living, office and entertainment space, as well as a boutique hotel, will create a play, work, stay environment complete with green space and a water feature. The development, combined with an intimate, state-of-the-art ballpark, will keep this destination bustling year round.

The Braves are also announcing the launch of a waitlist for fans who are non-season ticket holders and who are interested in purchasing season tickets in the new ballpark. Current season ticket holders already receive top priority in securing season tickets for the new ballpark. To join the wait list, go to www.braves.com/newballpark to register with a $100 refundable deposit for access to purchase season tickets for the new ballpark. That deposit can be applied to the cost of the season tickets.

Both the ballpark and mixed-use development will open in April 2017.

To view or download these renderings go to www.homeofthebraves.com

#

Contact:

Traci Messier, Jackson Spalding, 404-214-3596 or tmessier@jacksonspalding.com

Bryan Harris, Jackson Spalding, 678-491-9447 or bharris@jacksonspalding.com

A conference call has been set for 11:30 a.m. this morning for media to ask the Braves questions on the renderings. Media can call 888-398-2342, access code: 1791452