Major Leaguers Help Teach Baseball to Underprivileged Children

300 Atlanta-area youth to join former Major League baseball players, including Chris Chambliss, Brian Jordan, Charlie Leibrandt and Steve Rogers at Players Trust's CITY CLINICS program, Saturday, October 10, in Atlanta, GA

WHO: Former Major League baseball players, including Chris Chambliss, Michael Devereau, Bob Galasso, Roy Hartsfield, Brian Jordan, Charlie Leibrandt, Steve Rogers, Craig Skok, Zane Smith, Gregory "Boomer" Wells and Larry Yellen.

WHAT: The Players Trust's City Clinics program is a grass-roots campaign underwritten and developed by Major Leaguers to promote the game of baseball to underprivileged children, ages 6-16, in select cities across the country.

The Players Trust developed the City Clinics program in partnership with the Major League Baseball Players Alumni Association's Legends for Youth program. Children participating in these free City Clinics will receive hands-on instruction from big leaguers in areas such as base running, pitching, hitting, throwing and fielding. During each 3-hour session, City Clinics' 300 attendees also will participate in a question and answer session with the players, and receive free T-shirts, autographs and refreshments.

The Major League Baseball Players Trust is a charitable foundation created by the players to help those in need. Through the Players Trust, active Major League players contribute their time, money and celebrity to call attention to important issues affecting those in need and to help encourage others to get involved in their own communities.

About the MLBPA and its Legends for Youth Program

Celebrating its 27th year in existence, the Alumni Association is a non-profit organization that was formed to promote the game of baseball, raise money for charity, inspire and educate youth through positive sport images. Each year, the MLBPA Legends for Youth Program gives thousands of children across the country a chance to learn baseball fundamentals and life skills from former Major League Legends.
